Dedication Exercises at the Martyn College.

The dedication exercises of the Martyn College of Oratory took place last night at the Shaftesbury Atheneum. A large and fashionable audience was present. The hall and stage setting was up to date and the performance meritorious. The principal feature of the evening was the address by Mr. E. B. Hay. He made a characteristic speech, in which he laughed, too, and made everybody join in the chorus. He called attention to the beauties of the place and the advantages it presented. He spoke glow-ingly of the work it had done and the work it would do if the good people of Washing-ton would lend a hand. He praised Mr. in a flattering manner. The audience was generous in its applause. The program was as follows: Piano, solo, La Truit, Heller, Prof. Arnold W. Meyer; address, Edwin B. Hay; vocal solo, "And the Stately Ship," Bischoff, Mr. Mait Wright; recitation, closet scene from "Hamlet," Prof. John R. Scott; recitation, Lorraine Lorree, Edner R. Edgerly; "A Gamut of Elocution," Mrs. Annie M. Scott; recitation, "Real Irish Wooing," Prof. Scott; piano solo, "Recollections of Home," Mills, Prof. Meyer; address, "True Oratory," Mr. M. W. Howard; recitation, "What a Little Girl Can Do," Miss Zue H. Brockett; pantomime, "The Difficulties of Taking a Pill," Mr. Frank T. Chapman; banjo solo, Miss Emma Gorham; drill exercises in physical culture, Miss Abbie Johnson and Miss Zue H. Brockett. The American Academy of Acting will hold its sessions in this college, beginning in October.

A diploma in itself amounted to little, but only as an evidence of hard work was it worthy of much remark. The throng in attendance testified to the prosperity and popularity of the school. Popularity was sometimes as dangerous to an institution as sometimes as dangerous to an institution as to an individual, but the school would ento an individual, but the school would en-deavor to maintain the just renown which it had won. The school had so advanced that it now stood inferior to none, and by wisely directed energy it would be made the first. The assistance of the students was essential to the accomplishment of this end. He explained that Hon. Jeremiah M. Wilson, who had been chosen as the prinwilson, who had been chosen as the principal speaker of the evening, was unable to be present and that Mr. T. A. Lambert would address them. Mr. Lambert explained that he had been served up to the stued that he had been served up to the students first on the same principal as dictated the serving of the weakest and thinnest dish as the first course at a feast. He would not express a diffidence which he did not feel, for he felt that they were all united by a bond of brotherhool. He admonished the juniors that they should not consider the elements proposed, apart from the general scheme of the law. The law was universal; it was the evolution of social relations, not made, but formulated. It had existed from all time, but had ciai relations, not made, but formulated. It had existed from all time, but had been developed in time. They were not to engage in the study of anything strange and artificial. The law was a part of their being. They were simply to ascertain those relations of men that were as immutable as reason. They should not confine their investigations merely to the rules laid down in text books. Like a wise traveler, they should seek a summit from which they could take a general observation. They had treatises to enable them to do this. They treatises to enable them to do this. They should enter upon the new scholastic year duly impressed with the fame of their alma mater.

The next speaker was Mr. R. Ross Perry. He was stormily applauded. He had been talking during the day not merely for been talking during the day not merely for love, but was talking tonight purely for love. He assumed that there were two classes of students present. One class essayed the law as an accomplishment and as the finish of a liberal education. This was wise. At one time this had been a great custom in England and on the continent. The speaker continued, that the mere accumulation of facts amounted to little. Training, to be effective, must tend to make man a thinking and a speaking force; to take old learning and make force; to take old learning and make something new out of it. Law was perhaps the study most calculated to develop the reasoning powers of man. He said some earnest words to the members of that great and too numerous class who had to work for a living and who were bent on the study of the law for business reasons. This class was increasing year by year and the erry. Promise that all the arrangements class was increasing year by year, and the struggle was becoming sharper. It was a shall be completed by the date now fixed, mistake to adopt the profession of law, unmistake to adopt the profession of law, unless the applicant for success felt that he had a decided calling for it. The few got ahead and the many were left behind. This should not be a discouraging thought. They said that one of the results of this growing legal competition was that examinations for the bar were increasing in rigor. When he had applied for admission to the bar, the only ability he had been called upon to show was an ability to pay for and open to show was an ability to pay for and open to show was an ability to pay for and open to show. This examination was conducted by the junior members of the bar, and they were intent on showing that they knew more than anybody else.

If the students would bear well in mind the lectures and the studies, and keep up a constant wrestle with their books, the results could not be regretted. Mr. Darlington made a brief speech, in which he complimented things in general and prophesied a prosperous year. Mr. Hamilton spoke of the glorious history of the school and of its wonderful progress and of its greater future. Mr. Morris then explained that a man had been called to preside over the moot court who was sure to make it a success. Mr. Holfort, the judge of the court, thereupon made a few remarks. Rev. J. Havens Richards, president of the university, indorsed and confirmed all that had been said by those who had preceded him. In addition to the two classes named by Mr. Perry, he had noticed that in all colleges with which he had been connected that there were two other classes, the minimizers and the amplifiers. The former were students who were determined to learn as little as possible, and the latter were bent on learning as much as possible. He feared that the former class was the larger. Students of the law should belong to the amplifiers. The scope of the law was as wide as the universe. The lawyer should have a great general knowledge. He should ha

With Interesting Addresses. The law department of the Columbian University opened most successfully last evening at the college building, corner of 15th and H streets, with a larger attend-ance of students than ever before. Prof. J. C. Welling, president of the university, presided at the opening exercises, which were made very interesting by short and bright addresses by different members of the faculty, as follows:

Justice David J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court on the law of corporations, Judge Walter S. Cox of the District Supreme Court on the law of real and personal property, of contracts and of crimes and misdemeanors; Judge William Maury, formerly assistant attorney general Maury, formerly assistant attorney general of the United States, on equity jurisprudence, common law and equity pleading and of the law of evidence; Judge Andrew C. Bradley of the District Supreme Court on criminal pleading and practice of criminal law; Mr. Henry E. Davis, ex-assistant district attorney, on the history of the law; Mr. Wm. F. It was announced that Mr. Johnson will conduct quizzing classes, composed of all students in the undergraduate department, that by his catechetical analysis the teachings of both lectures and text books may be impressed upon the memories of the pupils. This is a new feature and promises to be very popular. It was also announced that Mr. Justice Harlan, late of the Bering sea court of arbitration at Paris, will return to the city in a few weeks and resume his lectures before the Columbian law department on the subjects of the constitutional jurisprudence of the United States, of the law of domestic relations, of torts and of commercial paper. The popularity of the different members of the faculty was clearly demonstrated by the loud and hearty welcome accorded them by the pupils.

their four days' sitting in the several elec-tion districts of the county on Monday. The tion districts of the county on Monday. The manner of conducting the registration in some of the districts, and especially in Wheaton district, is sharply criticised here by members of both political parties. That the provisions of the present registration law are capable of being turned into acts of despotism has been fully demonstrated in several instances. While all well-meaning citizens of both parties are in favor of restricting the right of franchise to those clearly entitled to exercise it, they fall to see the necessity of attempting to disfranchise those whose business or pleasure may have caused whose business or pleasure may have caused a temporary absence from the county during the past year. It is a matter of congratulation that the business of hunting up these cases and bringing them to the attention of the officers of registration is confined to a few new-comers in the county and is not participated in by the residents.

NATIONAL VETERINARY COLLEGE. The New Year Opened Last Night

With Favorable Prospects. The school year of the National Veterinary College was inaugurated at the college, No. 1227 R street northwest last even ing, with an attendance of more than double the number of students who pursued the course last year. President D. the profession of veterinary science during recent years; the superior advantages enare visiting Miss B. Butler in Poolesville joyed by students in Washington, and the aims of the National Veterinary College particularly. particularly.

Dr. Charles W. Stiles was then introduced, and delivered the formal opening address. Dr. Stiles spoke of the relations of the various medical sciences to each other, and especially the relation of veterinary medicine to zoology. He then referred to the domesticated animals and man from a zoological standpoint, giving what is known of their antiquity in domestication, and of their evolution from wild animals. This was followed by a discussion of the immense variation in lives wild animals. This was followed by a discussion of the immense variation in lives to be found in different breeds, and in various individuals of the same breed, together with an enumeration of a number of cases of reversion, heredity, monstrosities, animal intelligence, &c. Dr. Stiles urged the class to pay particular attention to these matters, and make themselves veterinary scientists rather than horse or cow "doctors."

The hospital of the college, at the corner of 19th and H streets northwest, will be The hospital of the college, at the corner of 19th and H streets northwest, will be a feature of the institution, and free clinics will be held on Wednesday and Saturday mornings of each week, at 10 o'clock, when free treatment will be given to animals of persons unable to pay for such service, and all having sick horses are invited to bring them at those hours for gratuitous treatment. One box stall has been reserved in the hospital and placed at the disposal of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, free of expense.

The lectures of the college will be continued at 4 p.m. today, and the National Veterinary College may be counted among the most successful of Washington's many educational institutions.

A MANDAMUS ASKED FOR. Mr. Long Wants to Be Restored to the Pension List.

Yesterday afternoon application was made before Judge Bradley, of the District Supreme Court, by Charles D. Long for mandamus against the commissioner of pensions, the object of the application being the effort of the petitioner to compel the commissioner to restore Long to the pension rolls, from which he had been suspended by order of the commissioner. The petition for the writ of mandamus sets out the citizenship of Long of Detroit, Mich., and that while serving as a private in the eighth Michigan infantry during the late eighth Michigan infantry during the late war he received a gun shot wound in the arm, which required amputation, and at the same time he was struck by a builtet which passed through his hip bone and lodged in the groin, where it still is. He sets out further that he was pensioned in 1863 at $8 per month and that his pension has been gradually increased to $50 per month, but that on the 1st of September, 1893, his pension was suspended and he received notice to report to the surgical board at Detroit for examination. He alleges that he has applied to the commission for a revocation, pending his apearance before that board, of the order suspending his pension, and his application has been refused. He asks, therefore, a mandamus to pension, and his application has been re-fused. He asks, therefore, a mandamus to compel the commissioner to continue the Judge Bradley directed that a rule issue against the commissioner of pensions, re-quiring him to show cause on or before 10 a. m., on the 19th instant, why the petition m., on the 19th insta-hould not be granted.
